Forest Fires

Forest fires escaping to woodlands in Southside Virginia show an increase over last year Virginia Division of Forestry's Farmville district office has announced. Escaped fires total 204 for the first half of this year, while 161 fires burned during the same period last year.

Forest acres lost to fire are less this year, Forestry officials said. Five hundred eight acres have been burned in 1970 while 525 acres burned last year.

In spite of dry weather in the early summer, few fires have occurred during the past 30 days.

Forest wardens are quick to praise fire departments, volunteers and other cooperators in the help to fight and control escaped fires. Fires, say Division personnel, are usually reported quickly and this helps to keep the loss of forest acres down.
